

Name:

Intro to Credibility Guiding Questions

Someone is credible if...

They are an expert on the topic or in producing accurate information

You can trust them to tell the truth about the topic

1. Why is it important to make sure you read accurate, credible information about science?

Source: National Geographic

2. Use the table below to organize what you know about the source. Everyone in your group should agree before you add something to the table!

| Details about the source that make it seem more credible                  | Details about the source that make it seem less credible |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                  |                                                                 |
| Details about the source that we're not sure help or hurt its credibility |                                                                 |

3. Based on what you learned, how credible did your group decide the source is?

1 (not credible)  10 (very credible)

Explain your group's rating:

Source: Last Week Tonight

4. Use the table below to organize what you know about the source. Everyone in your group should agree before you add something to the table!

| Details about the source that make it more credible                       | Details about the source that make it less credible |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                  |                                                            |
| Details about the source that we're not sure help or hurt its credibility |                                                            |

5. Based on what you learned, how credible did your group decide the source is?

1 (not credible)  10 (very credible)

Explain your group's rating: